The test is based on the Rorschach inkblot test, which consists of 10 inkblots that are shown to the subject and their responses are recorded. The test is scored based on the subject's responses to each inkblot and the results are compared to a norm. The test is used in clinical settings to help diagnose mental health conditions and to assess a person's personality and thought processes. In warm climates people like to sit outside in the sun.
